The winner of this week's BEAT100 World Music Video Chart is Canadian songstress Julie Curly! Julie, from Montreal, serenaded the BEAT100 community with her touching original tribute to Beatles legend John Lennon. 'Can You Imagine?' saw Julie receive 3 Bronze Awards from the A&R team and over 2900 views to date. Born on the day that John Lennon tragically died, Julie has felt a connection with the tragic artist from a young age. She movingly describes that connection in her winning track this week, co-written with her music teacher Monique Dumas. Julie tells BEAT100 'This unique musician, poet and peacemaker is my main influence, not only in music, but also in his vision of life...I thought it made sense that I introduce myself to the BEAT100 community with this video, singing about an English legend and the influence he had on my life.' Inspired by the likes of Katie Melua, Janis Joplin and of course, The Beatles, Julie has performed multiple shows in Quebec over the last decade, also having travelled as far as France and Belgium to spread her music. Julie released her debut album 'Confessions' in 2014, with all of the tracks in her native French. She says of her creative process, 'With all the production and promotion steps, it was a long (but exciting!) creative process; putting your emotions out there for the world to listen, may sometimes be a scary thing, but having people responding positively to your work while on stage, it's priceless!'. The passionate singer/songwriter is now working on making her second album, which even includes some tracks in English for those of us that are not native French speakers! With plenty of local shows lined up in Montreal, Julie is aiming to open up her music to other French speaking countries, spreading her talent across the continents! BEAT100 can't wait to hear what's next from Julie Curly!
